Kleemann likes to work in bronze because it is so permanent and the surface can be finished in almost any color. She chose to give this piece a silvery, pewter color rather than the traditional dark brown bronze color. Different colors give different feelings. What color would you choose to make this sculpture? The artist chose a life-size scale for this sculpture to make it easy to work on the details. The bronze woman's face is very life like, but her hair is stylized. Does the hair remind you of something? Did you notice the eyes of the bronze woman? What do you think she is thinking or feeling?

The process of making a bronze sculpture is complicated. Bronze sculptures progress from clay models into molds, wax forms, plaster casts, hot liquid bronze, and finally to the cooled bronze piece which is finished in the desired color.

Are there any other artists that use bronze also, but maybe to represent animals instead of humans?
